breed of the keet cat. These tiny, nocturnal, and mischievous animals are highly territorial and will react as if they are being attacked when you call them, no matter how they feel. Their main characteristic is their breath. These little fellows have a unique ability to capture us with their breath, by performing a distinctive pant-like action with their muzzles. In fact, for some pets, this action can be problematic, especially if the pet is reacting to a perceived threat and may be seeking to defend itself. A lot of our clients have noticed that, while they sleep, our pet will struggle to breathe. One of the reasons we believe the struggle to breathe is happening is because our pet thinks they are being attacked, despite being in a completely different room. This strange, bout of panting can go on for hours, if not longer. Wake up call This strange thing can often happen at night, and even though you hear your pet, you still may not know what is happening until you are suddenly awakened in the middle of the night. You may be startled, or you may hear your pet breathing heavily. Can you switch your pet off and onto the “backup” power? –
